Citation Styles: Notes-Bibliography and Author-Date

A significant portion of the Chicago Manual of Style, including the 15th edition, is dedicated to the art and science of citation. The manual presents two primary citation systems, each suited for different academic disciplines and publishing contexts. The first, and historically more prevalent in many humanities fields, is the Notes-Bibliography (NB) system. This system utilizes footnotes or endnotes to cite sources and includes a comprehensive bibliography at the end of the work. The second system, often favored in the social sciences and natural sciences, is the Author-Date system, which employs parenthetical in-text citations that refer to a reference list at the end of the document.

The Notes-Bibliography system is characterized by its detailed annotation capabilities. Footnotes or endnotes can be used not only to cite sources but also to provide supplementary information, explanations, or digressions that might disrupt the flow of the main text. The bibliography, conversely, serves as an alphabetical listing of all sources consulted and cited. The 15th edition provides extensive examples and detailed instructions on how to format both notes and bibliography entries for a wide array of source types, including books, journal articles, websites, and even less common materials. This meticulous attention to detail ensures that authors can accurately and consistently attribute their sources.

The Author-Date system offers a more concise approach to in-text citation. Parenthetical citations typically include the author's last name and the year of publication, often followed by a page number if a direct quote is being used. This method allows readers to quickly identify the source of information without interrupting the reading experience with extensive footnotes. The corresponding reference list at the end of the work then provides the full bibliographic details for each cited source. The 15th edition meticulously outlines the requirements for both the parenthetical citations and the reference list, ensuring consistency and accuracy across different disciplines.
