

chicago manual of style artwork citation format

chicago

Chicago Manual of Style Artwork Citation Format Chicago

chicago manual of style artwork citation format chicago is a topic that often causes confusion for students, researchers, and anyone needing to properly credit visual works. Whether you are citing a painting, a sculpture, a photograph, or digital art, understanding the nuances of the Chicago Manual of Style (CMOS) is crucial for academic integrity and clear communication. This guide will delve into the intricacies of citing artwork according to CMOS, covering both footnotes/endnotes and the bibliography. We will explore the essential elements required for accurate citations, differentiate between various types of artwork, and provide clear examples to illustrate the process. Mastering the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago will ensure your work is both scholarly and adheres to established academic standards.

Table of Contents

Understanding the Core Components of Artwork Citations

Citing Artwork in Footnotes and Endnotes

Citing Artwork in the Bibliography

Special Considerations for Digital and Online Artwork

Common Pitfalls in Chicago Style Artwork Citation

Frequently Asked Questions About Chicago Manual of Style Artwork Citation Format Chicago

Understanding the Core Components of Artwork Citation

Accurately citing artwork in Chicago style, often referred to as the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago, hinges on including a specific set of core components. These elements provide readers with all the necessary information to locate and verify the source of the visual material you are referencing. Without these key pieces of information, your citation is incomplete and potentially misleading. The goal is to offer a clear and unambiguous path back to the original artwork.

Essential Bibliographical Information

Regardless of whether you are citing a physical artwork in a museum or a digital image found online, certain information is always paramount. These include the artist's name, the title of the work, the date of creation, and the medium. The artist's name is typically presented last name first in the bibliography but first name first in footnotes/endnotes. The title of the artwork is italicized, following the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago. The date of creation provides context for the artwork's historical or cultural significance. Finally, the medium, such as oil on canvas, bronze, or digital photograph, helps describe the physical nature of the work.

Details About the Artwork's Location

Beyond the artwork itself, its physical or digital location is vital for proper citation. For artworks housed in institutions, this means specifying the museum or gallery, the city where it is located, and ideally, the collection or accession number if available. This level of detail allows a researcher to find the specific piece within a large institution. For digital reproductions, the website or platform where the image was accessed, along with a stable URL or DOI (Digital Object Identifier), becomes the equivalent of the physical location. Following the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago precisely in this regard ensures verifiability.

Citing Artwork in Footnotes and Endnotes

Footnotes and endnotes serve as immediate references within the text, allowing readers to quickly consult the source of information without disrupting the flow of reading. When citing artwork in these notes, the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago emphasizes clarity and conciseness while still providing sufficient detail. The order of information differs slightly from the bibliography.

Format for Physical Artworks

For physical artworks, the footnote or endnote begins with the artist's first name followed by their last name. Then, the title of the artwork appears in italics. Following the title is the date of creation. The next crucial element is the medium, which is typically presented in parentheses. Finally, the location of the artwork is provided, including the name of the museum or gallery and its city. For example:

-

Jane Doe, Sunrise Over the Lake, 2020, oil on canvas. Art Gallery of Chicago, Chicago.

If the artwork is part of a specific collection within the institution, that can also be noted. The Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago encourages providing as much identifying information as is readily available and relevant to your research.

Format for Digital Reproductions of Artworks

When citing a digital reproduction of an artwork, the footnote or endnote format adapts to reflect the digital medium. The artist's name and artwork title are presented similarly. However, instead of physical location details, you will provide the name of the website or platform where the image was found, the date of access, and the stable URL. For instance:

-

John Smith, Cityscape at Dusk, 2018, acrylic on board. Accessed October 26, 2023. The Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.

https://www.metmuseum.org/art/collection/search/image_id.

It is important to use the most stable and direct URL possible, ideally one that points directly to the image or a page dedicated to it. This adheres to the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago by facilitating easy retrieval for your readers.

Citing Artwork in the Bibliography

The bibliography, appearing at the end of a work, provides a comprehensive list of all sources cited. For artwork, the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago dictates a specific order and punctuation. The primary goal here is to allow readers to easily compile a list of all visual references used in your document.

Bibliography Entry for Physical Artworks

In the bibliography, the artist's last name comes first, followed by their first name. The title of the artwork is italicized. The date of creation follows, and then the medium. Finally, the name of the museum or gallery and its city are included. For example:

-

Doe, Jane. Sunrise Over the Lake. 2020. Oil on canvas. Art Gallery of Chicago, Chicago.

This structure in the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago provides a consistent format for alphabetical listing and clear identification of each artwork.

Bibliography Entry for Digital Reproductions of Artworks

For digital reproductions, the bibliography entry follows a similar pattern but incorporates digital access information. The artist's name, artwork title, date of creation, and medium are listed as before. Then, the name of the website or platform is provided, followed by the date of access and the URL. An example would be:

-

Smith, John. Cityscape at Dusk. 2018. Acrylic on board. Accessed October 26, 2023. The Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.

https://www.metmuseum.org/art/collection/search/image_id.

When citing digital images, always try to find the original source of the image or a reputable institutional reproduction. The Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago prioritizes accuracy and source verification.

Special Considerations for Digital and Online Artwork

The proliferation of digital art and online repositories presents unique challenges for citation. The Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago offers guidance for these scenarios to ensure proper attribution and accessibility. It's important to distinguish between an artwork that is inherently digital and a digital reproduction of a physical artwork.

Citing Artworks Created Digitally

For artworks created entirely in digital formats, such as digital paintings, animations, or interactive installations, the citation needs to reflect their born-digital nature. The artist's name, title of the work (italicized), and the date of creation are essential. The medium might be described as "digital art," "animation," or a more specific technical term. If the artwork is accessible online, a URL and access date are crucial. If it was exhibited in a digital gallery or platform, that information should be included.

Navigating Fair Use and Image Rights

While the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago focuses on attribution, it is also important to consider issues of copyright and fair use when reproducing images of artwork. Always ensure you have the right to use an image, especially for publication. Most academic uses fall under fair use, but it's a responsibility that accompanies the act of citation. Many museums and archives provide guidelines on image usage and citation for their collections.

Common Pitfalls in Chicago Style Artwork Citation

Despite clear guidelines, several common errors can arise when applying the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago. Awareness of these pitfalls can help writers avoid them and produce more accurate citations.

Inconsistent Formatting Between Notes and Bibliography

One of the most frequent mistakes is failing to maintain the distinct formatting required for footnotes/endnotes versus the bibliography. Remember that the artist's name order and the inclusion of a specific page number (if citing a particular section of a larger work) can differ. Double-checking the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago for each is vital.

Missing or Incorrect Identifying Information

Another common issue is omitting crucial details such as the date of creation, the medium, or the exact location of the artwork. For digital images, forgetting the access date or providing a broken URL can render the citation useless. Precision in gathering and transcribing this information is key.

-

Artist's name

-

Title of artwork (italicized)

- Date of creation
- Medium
- Location (museum/gallery and city, or website/platform and URL)
- Access date (for online sources)

Ensuring all these elements are present and correctly formatted is fundamental to adhering to the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago.

Failure to Italicize Artwork Titles

A simple yet significant stylistic error is the failure to italicize the titles of artworks. This is a consistent rule across different citation styles and is an important visual cue for readers. Always ensure artwork titles are in italics, as dictated by the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago.

Q: What is the primary difference between citing a painting and a sculpture in Chicago style?

A: The primary difference lies in the description of the medium. For a painting, you would typically state "oil on canvas" or "watercolor on paper," while for a sculpture, you might specify "bronze," "marble," or "mixed media." The rest of the citation elements, such as artist, title, date, and location, remain consistent with the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago.

Q: Should I include the accession number when citing artwork in Chicago style?

A: Including the accession number is highly recommended if it is readily available, especially for artworks in major museum collections. It provides a precise identifier that can be invaluable for researchers attempting to locate the specific piece. Always consult the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago guidelines for the most detailed requirements.

Q: How do I cite a photograph taken by myself of a public sculpture?

A: When citing your own photograph of a public sculpture, you would treat it as a photograph you created. The artist would be you, and the title would be the descriptive title of your photograph. The medium would be "photograph." You would then provide details about where the photograph was taken (the location of the sculpture) and the date you took it, along with details of your own collection or publication. The Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago allows for this self-referential citation.

Q: What if the artwork's date of creation is uncertain or unknown?

A: If the date of creation is uncertain, you can use "n.d." for "no date" in the citation. If there is an estimated date range, you can present it as such, for example, "ca. 1900–1910." Always consult the most recent edition of the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago for the preferred abbreviation and format for unknown dates.

Q: How do I cite artwork found on a general image search engine like Google Images?

A: Citing directly from a general image search engine is generally discouraged. Instead, you should try to trace the image back to its original source, such as a museum website, an artist's portfolio, or a reputable art publication. If the original source cannot be found, and the image is essential, cite the search engine as the platform, including the search terms used, the date of access, and the URL of the search results page, but clearly note that the original source was not identified. This is a less ideal scenario under the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago.

Q: What is the correct way to cite a print or reproduction of an artwork found in a book?

A: When citing a reproduction of an artwork found in a book, you are essentially citing the book as your source. The citation would include the author of the book, the title of the book (italicized), the publication information, and the page number where the artwork appears. You might also mention the original artist and artwork title within the text or as a descriptive note if necessary, but the primary bibliographic entry refers to the book itself, following the Chicago Manual of Style artwork citation format Chicago.

Chicago Manual Of Style Artwork Citation Format Chicago

Chicago Manual Of Style Artwork Citation Format Chicago

Related Articles

- chicago manual of style editor resources
- chicago manual of style for book journal content editors
- chicago manual of style author-date pdf

Back to Home