Identifying Your Needs

Before diving in, consider what you need assistance with. Are you unsure about a specific punctuation mark, the correct way to cite a particular source, or how to format a manuscript? They serve as excellent starting points when you have a general area of concern but are not sure of the exact terminology.

Citation Styles: Author-Date vs. Notes and Bibliography

A significant portion of the Chicago Manual of Style handbook online is dedicated to its two primary citation systems: the Notes and Bibliography system and the Author-Date system. Understanding the differences and applications of each is crucial for academic and professional writers.

The Notes and Bibliography System

This system is favored in many humanities disciplines, such as literature, history, and art history. It uses numbered footnotes or endnotes to cite sources within the text and a corresponding bibliography at the end of the work. The notes provide detailed source information, allowing readers to easily locate the original material. The bibliography offers a comprehensive list of all sources consulted and cited.

The Author-Date System

Commonly used in the social sciences and natural sciences, the Author-Date system employs parenthetical in-text citations that include the author's last name and the year of publication. A corresponding reference list (or works cited list) at the end of the document provides full publication details for each source. This method is often preferred for its brevity in the text and its ease of use for readers who need to quickly identify the publication year.

The online manual provides extensive examples for both systems, covering a wide range of source types, including books, journal articles, websites, and interviews. It also offers guidance on how to handle common citation challenges, such as multiple authors, edited volumes, and unpublished materials.
